- Between two rows, split the difference: sunset moves about a minute a day. Check the exact minute for your venue and date before you print the run of show.
- Golden hour starts about an hour before sunset. Last light is the end of civil twilight, when the sky stops helping the camera.
- With no first look, the ceremony should end about two hours before sunset: the family photos and the portraits happen in daylight, and the cocktail hour covers them.
- With a first look, most of the portraits are done before the ceremony, and an hour before sunset is enough.
- An outdoor ceremony should end no later than thirty minutes before sunset, or the recessional walks out in the dark.
- Sunset portraits are a fifteen-minute step-out at thirty minutes before sunset. Put it in the run of show so the MC and the caterer know where you went.
- The clocks change in March and November. On the weekend of the change, sunset jumps an hour; the table shows the clock in force for each date.
